Alternative living spaces

John Fisher, a builder, and his wife Elizabeth wanted more living space, so they left their small flat for an old 40-metre-high castle tower. They have spent five years turning it into a beautiful home with six floors, winning three architectural prizes. Whilst it used to be an empty, unused space before, it has now become a practical, light and spacious living arrangement.

'I love the space, and being private,' Elizabeth says. 'You feel separated from the world. If I'm in the kitchen, which is 25 metres above the ground floor, and the doorbell rings, I don't have to answer it because visitors can't see I'm in!'

'There are 142 steps to the top, so if I go up and down five or six times a day, it's very good exercise! But having to carry heavy things to the top is terrible, so I never buy more than two bags of shopping from the supermarket at a time. Apart from that, it's a brilliant place to live.'

'When, we first saw the place, I asked my father's advice about buying it, because we couldn't decide. After paying for it, we were a bit worried because it looked awful. But we really loved it, and knew how we wanted it to look.' Having a clear idea in terms of design and layout really helped, she explains, as it was difficult to imagine how to live there when it was just an empty shell.

'Living here can be difficult - yesterday I climbed a four-metre ladder to clean the windows. But when you stand on the roof you can see all the way out to sea on a clear day, and that's a wonderful experience. I'm really glad we moved. Our old place certainly proved easier to clean and maintain. However, the benefits of living in the tower definitely exceed our old living arrangement.' For her husband, on the other hand, the biggest advantage of the flat was its proximity to the shops: 'You never had to walk far to get a loaf of bread. Now, we have to plan a bit more, but, on the plus side, we enjoy the peace and quiet. There are hardly any neighbours and we can turn up the music without disturbing anyone.'
